

Collecting the Pandemic: A Call to the Community

The Brockville Museum's mandate is to capture Brockville stories. As we are currently living through a major event in history, we have the responsibility to record these events for future generations. We are reaching out to the community to gather local stories and accounts of everyday life during the COVID-19 pandemic. Share your written accounts (.doc or .pdf), or photographs (.jpg), by emailing them to museum@brockville.com with the subject line "Collecting the Pandemic".

Please include your name, age, contact information, and your city/town of residence. By submitting a story or image, you grant the museum permission to store the information/royalty-free photos in the museum's research files to be use for any future exhibition, promotion, programming, or any other way the museum deems relevant.

Thank you for being a part of history!

Some of the experiences we are hoping to document include:

- Ways covid-19 has affected you at work, school or home
- Struggles faced during the pandemic
- How did you celebrate milestones?
- Any positive stories experienced during the pandemic
- Any stories of people supporting each other and showing kindness during the pandemic
- Did you become more engaged with local news or social media
- Please include my name if sharing this story or image

When information or photos are used, we want to credit it properly. Please choose between the two options below.

- Please DO NOT include my name if sharing this story or image: your name will still be part of the record but will not be made public.
- Please include my name if sharing this story or image.
